Editorial Review

From the Author

This book was written to give hope to children who have experienced the death of a parent.

My intention is that loved ones and those working with grieving children will use these pages as a springboard for discussion and a tool for healing.

Through this true story, children can see that it is possible to continue to grow, thrive and enjoy life even after the devastating loss of a parent. The hurt they feel at the beginning of grief - that hole in their hearts - will lessen over time as they move forward with their lives.

--Mari Dombkowski

From the Inside Flap

Thea thought if only her daddy would walk through the door or call on the phone everything would go back to being OK. But that never happened.

There was a big hole in her heart and it hurt. She wondered if this was the end of her family's story.

But it wasn't ...

About the Author

Mari Dombkowski's husband died in 2008, leaving her with two young daughters to raise. She thought it was the end of their happy family. But after years of turning life's pages forward, Mari and her daughters want to tell other grieving children that a parent's death is NOT the end of their story. A happy new chapter is possible.
